

SEPTEMBER NATIONAL DAYS (PART 1): WHY CELEBRATE AND HOW TO CREATE YOUR OWN (NO, REALLY, YOU CAN!)

September is like the month equivalent of a potluck—everyone brings something to the table. Whether you’re celebrating cheese pizza, talking like a pirate, or desperately clinging to the last bit of summer, this month has something for everyone. But did you know that you can create your very own national day too? Yes, you, random internet user! All it takes is some creativity, a dash of persistence, and maybe a sprinkle of legal wizardry.

So, grab your guacamole, ice cream cone, and coffee (because those are real September days), and let’s dive into the world of September National Days—and how you can invent your own. Spoiler: It’s easier than adopting a pet rock. (That’s probably also a day.)

The Delightfully Random National Days of September

First, let’s appreciate some of the finest examples of human ingenuity in holiday creation. Behold, some of September’s best:

- September 1: National Chicken Boy’s Day – Who is Chicken Boy? Why does he have a day? We don’t know either, but here we are, celebrating a giant chicken-headed statue from Los Angeles.
- September 5: National Cheese Pizza Day – Because nothing brings people together like a pizza so basic it doesn’t even have toppings.
- September 9: National Grandparents Day – The day when we honor our grandparents for spoiling us rotten and making us wonder, “Where was all this candy when I was a kid?”

- September 11: Patriot Day – A solemn and important day, commemorating the tragic events of September 11, 2001.
- September 19: Talk Like a Pirate Day – Arrr, matey! A day where it’s socially acceptable to wear an eyepatch and ask people if they’ve seen your parrot.
- September 28: National Good Neighbor Day – A reminder to stop side-eyeing your neighbor for borrowing your lawnmower and not returning it... yet.

How to Create Your Own National Day (For When You Really Want to Celebrate Sporks or Left-Handed Toenail Clippers)

Do you ever wonder how these days come into existence? Who decided we needed a National TV Dinner Day? (Answer: Probably someone with a microwave and too much time on their hands.) But here’s the good news: you can make a national day too! Yes, even if you want to honor something completely random, like “National Admire Your Neighbor’s Lawn Day.”

Later this month, we will tell you how to create your own national holiday.
